Bride won by Bravery, the feature at the Comique is a good enjoyable picture of pleasing manner. Good programs continue at the Dreamland theatre. Hundreds were delighted last night with the first picture, which shows how a regular U. S. soldier is trained. A picture that was hardly noticed in their advertisement was the real feature at the Comique last night, a picture entitled "The Tramp's Story," and taken from the well known poem, "Twins Way Down in Lehigh Valley." There were very few dry eyes at the conclusion of the picture. First came a few lines from the poem, then was shown the poor old tramp in the barroom, where he was trying to beg a drink. The attendant was about to eject him, but a promise of his life story made all therein eager listeners.

Then follows scene after scene of the tramp's life, a happy home, a loving wife and a beautiful daughter, the joys of the valley. A stranger comes and casts a shadow that deepens into the darkest gloom over the happy home. The mother and daughter die, the daughter of shame, the mother of sorrow. The father, a broken wreck, starts into the world with only one purpose in life, to wreak revenge on the man who has made a tramp of him. The acting is superb, interspersed throughout are lines from the poem which give the picture almost double the usual interest.
